Dear Court Theatre Family,

Welcome to King Hedley II, and to Court’s 65th season! This will be Resident Artist Ron OJ Parson’s eighth time directing a play in August Wilson’s American Century Cycle at Court Theatre, and is his first time tackling this powerful work. We’re thrilled to be continuing our commitment to staging all of the plays in Wilson’s Century Cycle with this piece, knowing that Ron and the talented team of actors and designers have illuminated the themes that continue to make Wilson an enduring voice in the American theatre.

Last season stands as the most successful in Court’s history. Our unprecedented “four-star” 2018/19 season included two world premieres, sold-out runs, multiple extensions, and consistent and enthusiastic critical acclaim. This overwhelming response to the art on Court’s stage illustrated how crucial classic theatre is in our current moment. It was a glorious year, and it would not have happened without the support of you, our patrons, subscribers and donors.

Our upcoming season is our most ambitious yet. King Hedley II is followed by Oedipus Rex, which kicks off The Oedipus Trilogy. Next comes Agatha Christie’s suspenseful classic, The Mousetrap, a visceral take on Ibsen’s The Lady from the Sea, and a rousing, roof-raising production of The Gospel at Colonus, which will propel our Oedipus Trilogy forward.

Classic theatre infuses our lives with meaning and awakens us to new understandings. In this coming season, our aim is to connect with the many communities Court Theatre serves in exciting new ways. By drawing on the knowledge of University of Chicago faculty, the passion of our patrons, and the voices of our South Side neighbors, we will show that everyone may find a home in classic theatre—and, by extension, a home at Court Theatre.

Thank you for joining us on this journey!

Sincerely,

Charles Newell

For many actors, working on an August Wilson play is a dream come true, a rite of passage, a profound honor. Read on to learn how some of the KING HEDLEY cast feel about performing Wilson’s work.

To Kelvin Roston, Jr. (Hedley), working on August Wilson is akin to working on Shakespeare—it requires a skill set that not every actor has. Roston observes that for black male actors, “we see an August Wilson play and see ourselves, our family members, our friends.” He says that watching Wilson’s plays exposed him to characters like Floyd Barton (Seven Guitars), Youngblood (Jitney), and Hedley (King Hedley II), and made him excited about the prospect of aging into these roles. “August Wilson has written us from the inside, unfiltered. He not only shows who we are, but also the why. It’s very specific; no matter the year it’s set, it remains relevant.”

Performing in an August Wilson play has been a lifelong goal of Kierra Bunch (Tonya). “Tackling King Hedley and being a part of this experience is exciting,” she says. “It’s exciting to actually get an opportunity to step into the work of a true visionary and one of the greatest storytellers of our times. Wilson writes about the human condition and anyone can find their own story in this play.”
Dexter Zollicoffer (Stool Pigeon) feels that acting in an August Wilson play is an artistic rite of passage. “When working on Wilson, you feel like you’re paying homage to the struggles and joys of being black in America,” he says. Dexter thinks that “by exploring the nuances of this specific community in 1985, it better prepares us for the racial and cultural dynamics at play today.”

One of the things that excites Ronald L. Conner (Mister) most about being in this play is the opportunity to showcase an unconventional family bound by blood, friendship, and proximity. “Working on an August Wilson play means an opportunity to give voice to the marginalized, working class of America,” he reflects. “It means I get to tell a universal story through a culturally specific lens.” To Ronald, the themes and issues raised in King Hedley II are quite timely. “Audiences need to see this play now, because it is ‘now!’”
Coriolanus, Julius Caesar, Macbeth, Othello, and King Lear...

Troy Maxson, Levee Green, Floyd Barlow, Harold Loomis, and King Hedley II...

Tragedies, with tragic figures, written by two great playwrights. Tragic characters brought to life who are as relevant today as when they were written, perhaps even more so.

With King Hedley II, August ties it all together; he lets Aunt Ester’s spirit continue to live. Unfortunately, the world we live in today is still filled with turbulence all around us, and we strive to survive in it. It is a protracted struggle that continues to drive us to battle and fight to the end.

What an honor it is to work on my 31st August Wilson production, and my first production of King Hedley II at my home theatre, Court, where I have been blessed to have directed many of my August Wilson productions.

King battles against the odds like so many of us have to, and will continue to do so until the battle is won, and the pressures of being Black in America are overcome.

“King Hedley II is the son of Ruby, a figure in my play Seven Guitars. This one’s set in the ‘80s, when you have all this violence and these kids with guns running around. I’m exploring three generations trying to cope with the breakdown of civility in the black community.”

—August Wilson

King Hedley II, like any great work of art, raises issues that are broad, deep, and universal: can people ever escape their past? Can love triumph over betrayal? What is religious faith in the face of relentless misfortune? What does it mean to be a real man?

But King Hedley II also raises issues that are specific to the life of African American people in 20th century America. It delves into one of the central, beating issues for racial justice in 21st century America, too: the enduring inequities of our criminal justice system.

King has recently returned from seven years in prison as the play opens, but we sense that he still lives in confinement. His options seem constrained not only by his criminal past—he’s plainly guilty of the crime for which he did time—but by the code of honor that governs behavior in Pittsburgh’s Hill District. “They got everything stacked up against you as it is,” says King. And “they” seems to stand for the world at large.
But King is also noting a trend in social policy that quickly spun out of control. By the mid-1980s, when this play is set, mass incarceration was already on the rise. When Ronald Reagan took office, the total prison population was 329,000. By the time he left eight years later, it had nearly doubled to 627,000. He declared a “war on drugs,” warned of a “crack epidemic,” and signed into law a federal Anti-Drug Abuse Act that established mandatory minimums for drug offenses for the first time. That ominous legislation would soon fill America’s prisons and jails with young men of color.

“They got everything stacked up against you as it is.” —King, King Hedley II

It also kept them there: in the mid-1980s, more than half of the people getting out of prison were rearrested within the first year. Even today, more than two million people are living behind bars in this country—but more than seven million live under some form of supervision, such as probation or parole. And a shocking 70 million Americans have some kind of criminal record.

The world of crime and punishment pulls inexorably on King Hedley II. Though we, the audience, never see a police officer on stage, we feel their threatening presence looming over the characters. Ruby insists that “the police gonna find out” if King transgresses, because “the police know everything.” King retorts that the police “ain’t found out who killed Little Buddy Will” or who committed arson in the neighborhood. This interchange should ring true to audiences at Court Theater: the Chicago Police Department’s rate of solving murders remains stubbornly below 20 percent.

Law professor Michelle Alexander argues that the so-called “war on drugs” is a thinly-veiled attempt to perpetuate slavery and white racial dominance, using the tool of criminal justice to control and suppress black people. Her book, The New Jim Crow, has become a top seller in recent years. But the racism entrenched in every aspect of the criminal justice system was nothing new to the people of Pittsburgh’s Hill District. “If a burglar break into a white man’s house to steal his TV and the white man shoot him they don’t say he wrong,” says King. “They pat him on the back and tell him to go on home.”

Public opinion about criminal justice is shifting today. Prison populations have fallen by about 10 percent in the last decade, and in 2018 the US Congress passed the first significant criminal justice reform bill in decades. Both Republicans and Democrats speak of the need for reform. The issue arises in presidential debates, where candidates hasten to criticize their rivals’ support for harsh criminal justice policies in the past. The proportion of African-American people in the prison population has fallen slightly in recent years. That’s good. But in order to match the incarceration rate for whites, it will have to keep sinking at the current rate for another 100 years. That’s the deeper truth that August Wilson wants us to see.

Life Care at Home locally owned and managed, is a not-for-profit organization founded in 2006.
This season, we are excited to announce new leadership for the Producers’ Circle, the society of Court’s most loyal, engaged donors. Trustee Sarah Marmor is the first-ever Chair of the Producers’ Circle. Read on to learn more about Sarah’s engagement with Court, and her plans for enhancing the intellectual and artistic experience our Producers’ Circle members enjoy.
Sarah, you have been a Trustee on Court’s Board since 2017. Can you tell us about that experience?

My role as a Trustee is one of the most satisfying parts of my life. I am incredibly proud to be associated with Court Theatre both because of the quality of the work and because of the talent of the people who work there. Everyone is rowing in the same direction; everyone is committed to putting on great, challenging, and intellectually satisfying work, and that value permeates the organization. My job as a Trustee is mostly to stay out of the way and answer the call when there is something I can do to help advance the mission of this wonderful place.

You’re the first Chair of the Producers’ Circle! What excites you about your new role leading this group of Court’s most loyal patrons?

Three things. First, I get to spread the word about Court to people who may not be aware of this gem. Second, I get to help plan wonderful events for Producers’ Circle members—we have big plans for enhancing the Producers’ Circle experience this year and for years to come. Third, I’m excited to connect with fellow arts patrons who are interested in getting a deeper grounding in the plays Court is producing. We are so lucky to be affiliated with a world-class academic institution like the University of Chicago, and take advantage of that intellectual firepower for our programs. It makes for some really engaging and enlightening events.

What do you enjoy about Producers’ Circle events?

I learn so much from these events. For Photograph 51 last year, several female scientists from the University talked to us about Rosalind Franklin and women in the sciences. It was moving to hear these talented women put Franklin’s struggles, and triumphs into perspective. I loved learning more about neuroscience at the event for Frankenstein, and the demonstration we got from Manual Cinema made me realize that puppetry hardly describes the amazing, groundbreaking, creative work they do. And, I went into the Augie March event knowing nothing about the book and having only the vaguest sense of what I would be seeing a month later. I came out realizing just how ambitious that production was, and it was thrilling to see those ambitions so successfully realized just a few weeks later. I have never been sorry I attended a Producers’ Circle event; I always leave having learned something new and these events always enhance my experience of the plays.

What plans do you have for expanding and growing the Producers’ Circle?

We have big plans. Our aim is to expand the offerings, make even more use of University of Chicago professors as speakers, and think up new, fun, and creative programs. We have listened to some current members and will enhance the benefits of membership, including inviting all members to our opening night pre-show and post-show events. If you love the theatre, if you want access to world-class thinkers and a grounding in the big ideas that distinguish Court’s productions, if you want to join a community of like-minded enlightened people, the Producers’ Circle is for you.

To learn more about joining the Producers’ Circle, contact Andrew Berg, Director of Development, at (773) 834-3305 or aberg@uchicago.edu.
Court Theatre’s
THE OEDIPUS TRILOGY
Sneak Peek
The Oedipus Trilogy is a multi-season journey that allows audiences to explore the recurring themes of fate, redemption, and justice in Sophocles’s works and in the world at large. Conversations between Court artists, scholars at the University of Chicago, and community members from Chicago’s South Side will inform each production of the trilogy, which includes Oedipus Rex (Nov-Dec, 2019); The Gospel at Colonus (May-June, 2020); and Antigone (Nov-Dec, 2020).

In conjunction with The Oedipus Trilogy, Court has partnered with a host of organizations, including Illinois Humanities’ Odyssey Project and Sojourner Scholars, Stony Island Arts Bank, the Hall and Greater Grand Crossing branches of the Chicago Public Library, and Bright Star Church to create a dynamic opportunities for students and communities to engage with all three plays in The Oedipus Trilogy.

Book groups will be facilitated at libraries across the city in which participants will read the texts of the trilogy and convene for community conversations in Rogers Park, Bronzeville, Pilsen, Greater Grand Crossing, Roseland and other neighborhoods.

Court also is offering its patrons the opportunity to join a book group for The Oedipus Trilogy! Over the course of four meetings, you will join others to discuss the text of Oedipus Rex, view a performance of the play, and then explore the themes through the lens of Court’s production. These discussions will be moderated by Nicole Bond, an Odyssey Project alum, and Sarah Nooter, a Professor in the Department of Classics here at the University of Chicago who has written extensively about Greek theatre and poetry.
